

POETRY.

Mrs Siddons had a moderate talent for versification. I am not aware that the following lines, which were the production of her pen, were ever published.—Cambridge.
"See, what the brightest wreath of fame,
But canker'd buds, that opening close;
Ah! what the world's most pleasing dream,
But broken fragments of repose?"
Lead me where peace with steady hand
The mingled cup of life shall hold,
Where time shall smoothly pour his sand,
And wisdom turn that sand to gold.
Then hark! at religion's shrine
This weary heart its load shall lay,
Each wish my fatal love resign,
And passion melt in tears away."

NOTES ON THE OLD ENGLISH DRAMA AND POETRY.

The "tents, pavilions and halls" of the days of Henry VIII. each had its name, as in encampments to-day—thus: the "Flower-de-luce," (deur de l'ye), "Harpe," "Gold Cross," "Red Rose," &c.
Henry VIII's minstrels were chiefly Italians, Germans or Frenchmen. The nobility also had their theatrical retainers.
The first indications of a classical taste in the drama were in 1520, (Hen. VIII.) when a comedy of Plautus was played—probably in Latin.
Cardinal Wolsey also had a company of players belonging to his household.
In expenses of Henry VIII's banqueting house, built at Greenwich 1527, a charge is found of "necessaries bought for the tryumphant of the Father of Heaven," showing that the Creator was introduced, and that miracle plays were still enacted. Henry himself took part in the jousts.
This same Henry VIII, who put an end to the Catholic religion in England, and confiscated the church property and jewels, was at one time a devotee of Luther's doctrines, and in 1528 had a splendid spectacle performed in Latin at his revels at Greenwich, in which Luther was the subject and hero of the satire. About this time this king presented to the French ambassadors 3000 ounces of silver plate, basins, cups, ewers, candlesticks, spoons, &c. &c.
In the reign of Edward VI. plays were inhibited in consequence of their dabbling in politics. But at the court they were permitted, and also tournaments and masks, in great splendor, especially at Greenwich, during the Christmas of 1551-2, to "recreate," as Holinshed has it, "and refresh the troubled spirits of the young king, who seemed to take the trouble of his uncle somewhat heavily." That uncle, now a prisoner in the Tower, and to be beheaded January 22, was the tyrant Duke of Somerset, whom Edward, in one of his proclamations only a short time before, calls "his dearest uncle, Edward, Duke of Somerset, Governor of his person, and Protector of his realm, dominions and subjects." It was the cruelty of his ambition which brought this duke to the scaffold. What must have been his feelings when looking down the Thames from the turrets of his prison, he beheld the long gleam of the torches and "crescent lights" reflected upon the bosom of the river from the revelings that were enacting at Greenwich, to divert his royal nephew's mind, now plunged into deeper gloom, perhaps, in the midst of these splendors, than the gray pile that incarcerated the wretch who was so soon about to exchange the imperial power he so lately possessed, for an ignominious death—an event, however, which his nephew could not have well looked upon but with shame, as well as horror.
"Bloody Queen Mary," who succeeded Edward VI, interdicted all plays calculated to advance the principles of the restoration, 1553; and in 1556, the star chambers, in consequence of the admixture of politics in the plays, issued an order suppressing all kinds of dramatic representations. London appears to have been exempted from this order. The musical instruments at the court revels in use, were, the trumpet, lute, harp, rebec, sagbut, viol, virginals, drums, flutes, bag-pipes, &c. None of the dramas, miracle-plays, &c. printed in the reign of Mary, are extant.
The theatrical establishment amounted to between 2 and £3000 per ann. for salaries alone.
"Queen Bess," the great patroness of the drama and literature, in 1559 interdicted all plays from touching on religion or politics; she herself played on the "virginals."
As an evidence how deficient in information may be those who have sustained the highest reputation for antiquarian lore, we mention Malone, considered one of the ablest commentators on Shakspeare, and who was unable to discover any accounts furnished from the office of the Revels relative to the expenses of entertainments at court prior to 1571, though he might have found so many MSS. on that subject, of a much earlier date, if he had narrowly searched the Bodleian Library, the Cottonian, and other collections, as well as those of the Chapter House, Antiquarian Society, State Paper Office, &c. (Collier, p. 173, vol. i.)
We often smile at the vulgarism of the word Musiciaster. This, however, was the genuine name in the times of Mary and Elizabeth; and it was at first spelt "m u s i c y o n e r s,"—musitioners.
The first English drama extant, taken from Roman history, appears to have been an old play called Julius Caesar, 1562.
George Gascoigne, on the title page of his "Tale of Hermestes the Heremite," which he presented to Queen Elizabeth, has a vignette representing him in the double character which he sustained, of a soldier and a poet, and underneath these lines:—
Behold (good Queen) a poet with a spear,
(Strange sightes well mark't are understood the better,)
A soldier armed with pennyle in his care,
With penn to fight and sword to wryte a letter.
His gowne hauf of his blade not fully bownde,
In doubtful doompes which way were best to take;
With humble harte and knees that kysse the grounde,
Presents himself to you for dewty's sake:
And thus he saith: no danger (I protest)
Shall ever lett this loyal heart I beare,
To serve you so as may become me beste,
In fildes, in toune, in courte, or any where;
Then peerless prince, employe this wyllynge man,
In your affayres to do the best he can.
Tam Marti quam Mercurio.
Up to Elizabeth's reign and after, the students of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn, were among the earliest writers of dramatic pieces. The performers in the court revels were sometimes the nobility themselves, the players of the court and of different nobles, the children of the chapel of St. Paul's, Westminster, and Windsor, in masks and rich dresses of gold and silk.—N. Y. Star.

RICHARDSON & HARE'S ESTABLISHMENT OF OFF-HAND PENMANSHIP.

COURSE OF TUITION TO CONSIST OF FIVE LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.
Classes in Session Morning, Noon and Evening.
Rooms Codman's Buildings, corner West and Washington sts.
MESSRS. R. & H. in presenting their claims to the public at this establishment, cannot offer any novel system or their patronage, by which bad writers are made accomplished penmen in the course of a few hours or even minutes—they are aware that "the age of miracles is past, as well as the days of chivalry." They pretend not to effect any more than science and experience can accomplish; but with, twice means they hope to impart as much benefit to their pupils, and effect as great improvements as have ever been attained in their profession.
Their system of instruction is intended to combine the two opposite but important advantages, in the mode by which writing is performed—the effective, rapid extension and inflection of the fingers, as well as the movement of the whole arm.
They have concentrated the too generally diffused principles in the most plain and perspicuous form, consistent with the practical advantages of the student; they have endeavored to adopt the "happy medium" in avoiding the Scylla and Charybdis of the art. The dull, slow progress of the VEUX RECUME, and the fatal rapidity of the new chain lightning styles. They flatter themselves they can offer to the public some new and ingenious methods for the illustration and tuition of ONMANSHIP, PENMANSHIP, of all descriptions, on reasonable terms.
